Comments:

While I applaud the move to clarify the PDA there are two weaknesses I see with the proposal. 1) Electronic Documents rendered in Printed Form: Not only does printing introduce unnecessary delay (and cost) in the production of the documents it is the binary form of redaction - this is counter to the intent of the PDA. The electronic documents be converted by the client if so desired. 2) Penalties and Consequences. There needs to be PERSONAL penalties or consequences for public officials blocking or unreasonably delaying PDA requests. As it is, there is little incentive for to comply. These documents are PUBLIC. They were generated at taxpayer expense and must be readily available to ensure a free and open society. Thank you for tackling this issue. -Lee Eggebroten
